A GUIDE

Planning for your future care

A GUIDE

There may be times in your life when you think about the consequences of becoming seriously ill or disabled. This may be at a time of ill health or as a result of an accident or other life changing event. It may simply be because you are the sort of person who likes to plan ahead. If you were to lose consciousness or the capacity to make decisions about your life today, what are the important things you would like those caring for you to know about you and what you would want to happen?

You may want to take the opportunity to think about what living with a serious illness might mean to you, your partner or your relatives, particularly if you become unable to make decisions for yourself. You may wish to record what your preferences and wishes for future care and treatment might be or you may prefer to trust those around you who understand the circumstances of your care to make decisions in your best interests at the time.

One way of making people aware of your wishes is by a process that is called advance care planning. This booklet provides an explanation about advance care planning and the different options open to you. The booklet uses some of the terms contained within the framework of the Mental Capacity Act (2005).

What is Advance Care Planning?

Advance care planning is a process of discussion between you, your partner, family or friends and depending on your individual circumstances at the time, those who may provide care for you, for example nurses, doctors, care home manager or social worker.

During this discussion you may choose to express some views, preferences and wishes about your future care so that these can be taken into account by those caring for you if you were unable to make your own decisions at some point in the future. This process will enable you to communicate your wishes to all involved in your care.

Aspects of Advance Care Planning

Opening the conversation

Exploring your options

Identifying your wishes and preferences

Refusing specific treatment, if you wish to

Identifying who you would like to be consulted on your behalf

Appointing someone to make decisions for you using a Lasting Power of Attorney

Letting people know your wishes

Advance care planning is an entirely voluntary process and no one is under any pressure to take any of the above steps.

Opening the conversation

A conversation about advance care planning may be prompted by:

- The wish to make plans just in case something unexpected happens
- Planning for your future or for retirement
- The diagnosis of a serious or long term condition or being aware that you may have a limited time to live
- The death or serious illness of a spouse, partner, relative or friend.

Not everyone will choose to engage in such a conversation and that is fine. However, talking and planning ahead means that your wishes are more likely to be known by others. This is important for those responsible for making decisions about your care if you lose capacity to make your own decisions.

Explore your options

Advance care planning can occur at any time you choose. You may feel you are able to make your own decisions about Advance Care Planning. However, many people find it helpful to discuss their options with people who are important to them. You may want to plan an appropriate time and place for having an advance care planning conversation. It may take some time and a number of discussions before you feel ready to make a plan.

You might have strong views about things that you would or would not like to happen. For example, some people may say they would always want to stay at home if they become ill. However this may not be a realistic option in some circumstances.

An example about exploring options

Ella lives nearby her daughter, son-in-law and two young grandchildren. She knows she is approaching the end of her life and would like to remain in her home. But Ella also feels that she really must go into a nursing home to save her family any extra work or upset. The idea is causing her a great deal of worry.

Ella has not told her family her wishes so she does not know how they feel about the possibility of looking after her. She has not asked her doctor what support is locally available to help her stay in her own home or if there are any alternatives available to her other than a nursing home.

Discussing and finding out all of the options available might help Ella resolve some of her concerns and make her future plans together with her family.

Identify your wishes and preferences

The wishes you express during advance care planning are personal to you and can be about anything to do with your future care.

If you become unable to make a decision yourself, this information will help those caring for you to identify what is in your best interests and make decisions on your behalf.

You may want to include your priorities and preferences for the future, for example:

- The name of a person/people you wish to be consulted on your behalf at a later time; this could be a close family member but can be anyone you choose
- Your preference about where you would like to be cared for, for example at home, in a hospital, nursing home or a hospice
- Where you would like to be cared for at the end of your life and who you would like to be with you
- Your thoughts on different treatments or types of care that you might be offered
- How you might want any religious or spiritual beliefs you hold to be reflected in your care
- Concerns or solutions about practical issues, for example who will look after your pet should you become ill.

Refusing specific treatment

During an advance care planning discussion, you may decide to express a view about a specific medical treatment which you do not want to have. This can be done by making an advance decision to refuse treatment.

An advance decision to refuse treatment (sometimes called a living will or advance directive) is a decision you can make to refuse a specific type of treatment at some time in the future. This is to be observed if you can't make your own decision at the time the treatment becomes relevant.

Sometimes you may want to refuse a treatment in some circumstances but not others. If so, you must specify all the circumstances in which you want to refuse this particular treatment.

There are rules if you wish to refuse treatment that is potentially life sustaining, for example, artificial ventilation or hydration. An advance decision to refuse this type of treatment must be put in writing, signed and witnessed and include the statement 'even if life is at risk as a result'.

If you wish to make an advance decision to refuse treatment you are advised to discuss this with a health care professional who is fully aware of your medical history.

You can revise your plans at any time while you have capacity. An advance decision to refuse treatment will only be used if at some time in the future you lose the ability to make your own decisions about your treatment.

Ask someone to speak for you

You may wish to name someone – or even more than one person – who should be asked about your care if you are not able to make decisions for yourself. This person may be a close family member, a friend or any other person you choose.

If in the future you are unable to make a decision for yourself, a health or social care professional would, if possible, consult with the person you named. Although this person cannot make decisions for you, they can provide information about your wishes, feelings and values. This will help the healthcare professionals act in your best interests.

This is not the same as legally appointing somebody to make decisions for you under a Lasting Power of Attorney. We look at that on page 10.

An example of naming someone to speak for you

Sheelagh lives alone and has no living relative. She has always received help and support from her lifelong friend and neighbour Jenny.

As Sheelagh gets older she starts to think about what will happen to her if for any reason her health fails. She knows and trusts Jenny well and she decides to ask her to be the person she would like to be consulted and speak on her behalf, should the need ever arise.

Sheelagh is happy that her financial affairs continue to be managed by her solicitor just as they always have been, and discusses that with her solicitor.

Making a Lasting Power of Attorney

You may choose to give another person legal authority (making them an 'attorney') to make decisions on your behalf if a time comes that you are not able to make your own decisions. This can be a relative, a friend or a solicitor.

A Lasting Power of Attorney (LPA) enables you to give another person the right to make decisions about your property and affairs and/or your personal welfare.

Decisions about care and treatment can be covered by a personal welfare LPA. An LPA covering your personal welfare (sometimes called health and welfare) will only be used when you lack the ability to make specific health and welfare decisions for yourself.

There are special rules about appointing an LPA. You can get a special form from the Office of the Public Guardian (OPG) or stationery shops that provide legal packs (there may be a charge for setting up an LPA). The form will explain what to do. Your LPA will need to be registered with the Office of Public Guardians before it can be used (see details on page 14).

LPA has replaced Enduring Power of Attorney.

An example of appointing a Lasting Power of Attorney

Kamal lives with a heart condition and has limited mobility; he has started to think about what might happen in the future if his illness gets worse.

Kamal has always handled the finances and affairs for both himself and his wife. They are both concerned that should anything happen to him, his wife would find it hard to cope with any major decisions or he may become too ill to make decisions about his own care.

To give him and his wife peace of mind they both decide to give Lasting Power of Attorney to their daughter. They both discuss with Farah their thoughts about any possible future decisions which may arise around money, property or healthcare. By doing so their daughter understands their wishes and preferences and can act for them in the way they would choose should the need ever arise.

Farah will only make decisions for her parents if a time comes that they are unable to make decisions for themselves.

Let people know

Advance care planning does not need to be in writing unless you are making an advance decision to refuse life sustaining treatment. However the professionals involved in your care and members of your family may find it helpful if your wishes and preferences are in writing, signed and dated. It is a good idea to give a copy of your wishes to everyone who needs to know. Remember to keep your own copy safe and let those who need to know of any changes you make.

By letting people know about your wishes provides you with an opportunity to discuss your views with those close to you. If you have made an advance decision to refuse specific treatment you must be sure that the people involved in your care know this. Ask your nurse or doctor to help you do this.

Key points about advance care planning

- No one is obliged to carry out advance care planning
- Discuss your wishes with those close to you, eg spouse, partner, relatives or carers.
- You can include anything that is important to you no matter how trivial it may seem to others
- If you wish to refuse a specific treatment, consider making an advance decision to refuse treatment
- It is recommended that anything you have written down should be signed and dated
- It is recommended you seek the advice of an experienced healthcare professional if making an advance decision to refuse treatment
- If you make an advance decision that refuses treatment that is life sustaining it must be in writing, signed, dated and witnessed and use a specific form of words
- If you have named someone to speak for you or have a Lasting Power of Attorney, remember to write down their name in your advance care planning documents
- If your wishes are in writing or if you have a Lasting Power of Attorney, keep a copy of the documentation safe and provide copies to those who need to know your wishes e.g. nurse, doctor, carer or family member.

Remember you can change your mind at any time.
